

Tamar Baiashvili came to the University of North Dakota in 2005 as an exchange student to study Economics. She is originally from the Republic of Georgia - a country in Eastern Europe bordering Russia, Turkey, Armenia, and Azerbaijan.

Getting a global education and multicultural experience has been the dream of her life for many years. In her junior year, thanks to the Eurasian Undergraduate Exchange Program, she was able to win the scholarship to go to the US to study.

After completing her bachelor's degree in summer 2007, she decided to continue her studies in pursue of Master of Science in Applied Economics.

Tamar has been involved in various extra curricular activities on campus. She is member of the International Economics Honor Society, International Organization, and UND Belly Dance club. She also volunteered at the North Dakota Museum of Art.

After completing her degree in summer 2009, Tamar plans to go back to Georgia where her family is: parents, twin brothers, grand parents, and other relatives. She hopes to find a job involving economic development programs for the Republic of Georgia.
